FLORIDA STATE UNIVERSITY IMPLEMENTS SOCIAL DISTANCING FOR ALL CAMPUS EVENTS

Following the recommendation of Governors DeSantis to combat the spread of the coronavirus, Florida State University officials will implement on-campus social distancing protocols, effective immediately (Friday, March 13, 2020) until at least April 6, 2020.

- University divisions, colleges, units and student organizations will cancel, postpone or virtually conduct (i.e. livestream) any planned event or gathering.
- University divisions, colleges, units and student organizations with plans to host an external speaker or external groups on campus between March 13 and April 6 should cancel, postpone or virtually conduct (i.e. livestream) those events or gatherings.

Social distancing is the best way to mitigate the spread of COVID-19. Social distancing refers to measures that are taken to increase the physical space between people to slow the spread of the virus. By maintaining a distance of six feet from others when possible, people may limit the spread of the virus. Social distancing also minimizes the number of interactions that provide the opportunity for the disease to spread.

Please help Florida State University limit or eliminate large groups of people coming together and minimize the number of people congregating in close settings.

As this is an evolving situation, the university will issue additional guidance in the days to come.
